Seeking a sustainable future for European Science

Friday, 8 November 2013, at 12:30
Ateneu Barcelonès, C/Canuda, 6 Barcelona
Meeting Room "Oriol Bohigas"

"European Science is dead: long live European Science!" This provocative slogan might be adequate to describe the current situation of European research. The lingering crisis has stricken science's investment and human resources in several countries, and even the European research budget. Cuts have hit hard, especially countries from southern Europe. However, science is definitely the way out from the recession. It will help Europe maintain its position as a global cultural reference, generate a knowledge-based economy, compete at the international level, as well as maintain and improve the quality of life of European citizens. This event brings together some of the most engaged scientists involved in drawing a better future for European science. The meeting aims at achieving a balance between evaluating the needs to address the current difficulties, and devising the next steps, to reach the path to recovery.
